SECTION SF 30 BLOCK 14 CONTINUATION PAGE

- 1. The following paragraphs provide contractor questions regarding the solicitation and the Government's answers to the questions:
- Q26. Figure 2 of the Tech Spec for the Contract is inaccurate. The exhaust system above the engine has two trunks (one almost centered over each bank) that lead to the front of the engine, not one exhaust system centerline on the engine as indicated. We would require an accurate drawing of the Plan View Exhaust Arrangement depicting the actual system currently installed in order to accurately fit our engine into existing systems.
- A26. Government will configure shipboard exhaust piping within existing size constraints to mate with vendors exhaust arrangement.
- Q27. Paragraph 6.3.1 RMAAA Requirements references several MIL-STDs that have been cancelled. MIL-STD-785(B) cancelled in Notice 3 Dated 30 Jul 1998; MIL-STD-756(B) Notice 2 Dated 4 May 1998; MIL-STD-470 has been superseded by MIL-HDBK-470 (no date for cancellation provided).
- A27. Paragraph 6.3.1 allows the usage of commercial reliability standards.
- Q28. Paragraph 6.4.1 FMECA Requirements reference MIL-STD 785 (see above); MIL-STD-470 (see above); and MIL-STD-1629(A) cancelled Notice 3 Dated 4 August 1998.
- A28. Paragraph 6.4.1 allows the usage of commercial standards.
- Q29. On the instructions that were cancelled (with the exception of MIL-STD-470, none of them give direct references to use in place of the instructions cancelled. Instead, a "broad statement of: Users may consult various national and international documents for information regarding failure mode, effects, and criticality analysis." Does MIL-HDBK-470 and MIL-HDBK-472 contain all the necessary reference material in order for this Contractor to generate an accurate RMAA/FMECA that will be acceptable to the U.S. Navy, or is additional guidance required? What "national and international" documents are acceptable for use in this Technical Specification for us to use to determine the RMAAA/FMECA?
- A29. If MIL-HNBK-470 does not contain sufficient information for the vendor to conduct the analysis, commercial standards are allowed as described in tech spec paragraphs 6.3.1 and 6.4.1. National and International documents typically include but are not limited to Society of Automotive Engineers (SAE) and International Standards Organization (ISO).
